what you have discovered into brainstorming all the things that you could do for your partner and all the things you would like your partner to do for you. Then you will create a plan for actually doing those things each month. You will reflect on the response and feedback you get from your efforts so that you can refine your approach. Remember each language has many different dialects and what you try first may not be on target. Don't give up. Keep trying to speak the same language but in a different way. For example, spending quality time could mean doing a project together or it could mean enjoying the planning but not the actual doing of a project together. It could mean going out
