

Caly

On a warm day of spring in the Music World, there was a girl who felt out of place. She was a little six-year-old girl who was lost in this mysterious yet curious and magnificent world of weird-looking instruments and funny-looking notes all over the place. With a worrisome expression clearly on her face, she wandered through this world, not knowing what to do. When all of a sudden, bam. She had rammed right over a shiny tiny, little thing with a horn coming out from one side and a small round silver thing coming

Caly knew her mom would punish her; in fact, she'd planned on it. But a late-night ride in the backseat of a cop car wasn't part of that plan. Seventeen-year-old Caly Monroe has one passion: graffiti. Her mom hates it. And that's precisely why Caly decides to spray paint a barely dressed portrait of her mom in the middle of town, hoping to change her perspective--or maybe it was just to piss her off. After Caly's mom picks her up from the police station, she banishes Caly to Gemstone Beach, the run-down bay beach where they used to live each summer. The last time Caly stepped a bare foot onto that beach's crusty sand was five years ago, before her mom opened a bakery and permanently ended their vacations. When Caly returns, she is tasked with manual labor at the boardwalk as punishment; though, she soon discovers the real punishment is facing the people she once cared most about, including her first love, Aden. While Caly continues to contemplate her artistic future, she has to let her heart choose what, and who, is worth fighting for.

She doesn't do relationships; she takes what she wants and sends the man on his way. When Caly meets sexy architect Evan Morrell, her world is thrown topsy-turvy. He doesn't respond to her advances the way she's used to men responding--yet he seems interested. Evan pulls her from her game of hunter/prey into his, which includes rope, blindfolds, and spanking benches. Can Caly break old habits in order to explore this powerfully sensual world with a man who inspires her most staggering emotions?
