This handbook analyzes the main issues in the field of hospitality marketing by focusing on past, present and future challenges and trends from a multidisciplinary global perspective. The book uniquely combines both theoretical and practical approaches in debating some of the most important marketing issues faced by the hospitality industry. Parts I and II define and examine the main hospitality marketing concepts and methodologies. Part III offers a comprehensive review of the development of hospitality marketing over the years. The remaining parts (IV–IX) address key cutting-edge marketing issues such as innovation in hospitality, sustainability, social media, peer-to-peer applications, Web 3.0 etc. in a wide variety of hospitality settings. In addition, this book provides a platform for debate and critical evaluation that enables the reader to learn from the industry's past mistakes as well as future opportunities. The handbook is international in its constitution as it attempts to examine marketing issues, challenges and trends globally, drawing on the knowledge of experts from around the world. Because of the nature of hospitality, which often makes it inseparable from other industries such as tourism, events, sports and even retail, the book has a

Satisfaction with internal communication is important in all organizations and is influenced by the quality and consistency of communication exchange. Job satisfaction is also widely studied in organizations and plays a significant role in employee behavior. Job satisfaction typically correlates with communication satisfaction across different occupations, yet little is known about the communication and job satisfaction relationship in the hospitality industry or specific foodservice organizations. This study explored multiple facets of communication and job satisfaction in a university foodservice setting using the Communication Satisfaction Questionnaire and the Abridged Job Descriptive Index. Results indicated that student employees had the highest levels of communication satisfaction ($M=181.75\pm38.24$) while classified employees reported lower communication satisfaction ($M=161.00\pm35.04$). Managers reported the lowest levels of communication satisfaction ($M=156.17\pm30.34$) and also expressed the highest job satisfaction ($M=78.66\pm18.66$). Substantial relationships between job and communication satisfaction were not clearly defined in this study; however, specific themes and opportunities for future research were discovered. Results of this study advance the knowledge about communication and job satisfaction in the foodservice environment.

Organisation forecasts, the industry will continue to grow and employ more people in the twenty-first century. In parallel with the growth of the tourism and hospitality industry world-wide, consumer expectations and demands for quality are rising while consumer tastes are varying on the one hand, and competition among the firms, both nationally and internationally, is intensifying on the other. In this business environment of heightened consumer expectations, distinct market segments that demand unique products and services, and stiff competition, tourism and hospitality organisations are looking for ways to excel in service quality, customer satisfaction, competition and performance. This book takes the view that employees are one of the most, if not the most, important resources or assets for tourism and hospitality organisations in their endeavour to provide excellent service, meet and exceed consumer expectations, achieve competitive advantage and exceptional organisational performance. The purpose of this book is to emphasise the critical role of employees for tourism and hospitality organisations and to examine the ways and means of managing their attitudes and behaviours for the mutual benefit of both parties: tourism and hospitality organisations and their employees.

Globally the hospitality and tourism industry is evolving and undergoing radical changes. The past practices are now advancing through the rapid development of knowledge and skills acquired to adapt and create innovations in various ways. Hence, it is imperative that we have an understanding of the present issues so that we are able to remedy problems on the horizon. Current Issues in Hospitality and Tourism: Research and Innovations is a compilation of research in the broad realm of hospitality and tourism. This book is divided into eight sections covering the following broad themes: – Training and education (hospitality students learning); – Organization and management (practical issues and current contributed and how could it have contributed to the development of organisations and economy? Based on theories and literature review each contribution compares HRM practices of several thousand European middle and large organisations, with a special focus on Slovenia, one of the new EU member states, which has successfully managed its transition to market economy. The analyses reveal how strategic the role of HRM in organisations is, how it balances between hard and smart work and between more or less friendly forms of work and employment flexibility. Critical observations of traditional managerial practices, including autocratic and non-participative leadership, which have impacts not only on the organisations but also on wider society, are made. The position of youth is particularly accentuated. Clear differences in these respects have been observed in the wider European area. Recommendations for managers on how their organisations and HRM should be shaped on the way to the knowledge economy are elaborated. International Encyclopedia of Hospitality Management 2nd edition

The book seeks answers to the question: how has Human Resource Management

Customer satisfaction has become an essence of success in today's highly competitive world. In service industry specifically, communication is vital to determine customer satisfaction. Past researches indicated that, most meaning of conversational messages comes from non-verbal communication. Therefore, this study intended to examine the relationship of non-verbal communication cues to customer satisfaction. A total of 210 hotel customers were sampled. They were evaluated on their perception on hotel employees' non-verbal communication behavior that would lead to their satisfaction to the services provided. The results illustrate that three (interpersonal warmth, attire and proxemics) of the non-verbal communication cues were significant and positively related to customer satisfaction. Proxemics was rated as the non-verbal communication cues that provided the most impact on customer satisfaction.

Multigenerational Communication in Organizations

This study explored the efficacy of using a company focused on-line social networking site to improve communication in an organization by facilitating the development of a community of practice and improving mentoring opportunities. It used a quasi-experimental approach to evaluate whether or not a relationship existed between participation in the on-line social networking site and employee job satisfaction, commitment to the company, and social capital. The experiment employed a mixed method research approach, analyzing both quantitative and qualitative data. The experiment was performed as a field experiment in an existing casino hotel with management approval and cooperation. No significant relationship was found between participation in the on-line social networking site and employee commitment to the organization. A negative relationship was found between participation in the on-line social networking site and the satisfaction subcategory of communication. The greatest decrease in satisfaction post implementation was among salaried employees for overall satisfaction and for the subcategories of communication and rewards. Employees who participated in the on-line social networking site experienced an increase in social capital as indicated by the number of participants who reported new friendships, the strength of the friendship ties, and subsequent face-to-face meetings. Activity levels on the social networking site were relatively low. The qualitative analysis revealed that employees in the organization viewed communication with senior management and mentoring as very important. Many employees believed that an online social networking site could be an effective tool in enhancing employee communication with management, and finding appropriate mentors: as long as senior management engaged actively on the site and employees had access to the site. Employees felt that it may not be as effective in strengthening the mentor/protégée relationship however because face-to-face communication and the ability to confide confidential information to ones mentor are important aspects of building a strong relationship. Two barriers that prevented management from actively engaging on the site were lack of time and a reluctance to reveal personal information about oneself on the site. The reluctance of several of the management employees interviewed rose to the level of fear of participation leading to negative outcomes.

In hospitality industry, revenues are driven by guest satisfaction. Therefore, in order to satisfy the customers, the service providers must ensure that the needs and wants of the customers are met. Many researchers agreed that effective communication skills greatly influence customers' satisfaction. The purpose of this paper is to examine the relationship between affective communication and customers' satisfaction in four and five star hotels in Kuching.

Changes are rarely accomplished by individuals. People are social animals and changes are social processes which have to be organized. Social psychology is essential for the effectiveness and development of the field of change management. It is necessary to understand people in change processes. Social psychology also teaches us that meaning is key during change and intervention. Social psychology makes change management comprehensible to people and allows them to consider their actions in groups and the organization on their merits. They may seem obvious and self-evident, but practice and science, as well as the popular change management literature, show that it is not. Drawing on the field of social psychology and based on primary research, The Social Psychology of Change Management presents more than forty social psychological theories and concepts that are relevant for the field of change management. The theories and concepts are analyzed and categorized following Fiske's five core social motives; belonging, understanding, controlling, enhancing self, and trusting. Each theory will have an introduction in which its assumptions and relevance is explained. By studying the scientific evidence, including meta-analytic evidence, the book provides practitioners, students and academics in the field of change management, organizational behaviour and business strategy the most relevant social psychological ideas and best available evidence, thereby further unleashing the potential of social psychology in order to feed the field of change management. By categorizing and integrating the relevant theories and concepts, change management is enriched and restructured in a prudent, positive and practical way. The overarching goal, however, inspired by the ideas and perspective of leading thinkers like Kurt Lewin, James Q. Wilson and Susan T. Fiske, is to make the world a better place. Social psychologists (being social scientists) study practical social issues, in our case issues related to change management, and application to real-world problems is a key goal. Therefore, this book goes beyond the domain of organizational sciences. The hotel industry is plagued with turnover. This study uses Framing Theory to examine hotel turnover. This study consisted of two phases. Phase I used qualitative research methods to answer RQ1: What communication frames do hotel managers use when describing the jobs at their hotel? Thirteen hotel managers were interviewed to discover the communication frames they use to describe their jobs. The nine communication frames of family, fun, team, manager as an advocate, autonomy, hard work, professional hotelier, comfortable, and communication style were revealed. The communication frames of professions, meaningful work, calling, dirty work, family, real jobs and work as flow were revealed through the literature review. The data from the literature review and Phase I was used to create a survey for Phase II. Phase II used quantitative research methods to answer RQ2: What is the relationship between the communication frames and job satisfaction, turnover intention and job commitment? Nine communication frames that formed valid and reliable scales were analyzed. Factor analysis revealed three work outcomes of job satisfaction, intent to leave and job regret. Several correlations between the communication variables and the work outcomes were revealed. Predictors of job satisfaction were fun and fulfillment. Predictors of intent to leave were fun, manager as an advocate, hard work, pay and real job. Predictors of job regret were fun, professional hotelier, and real job. This study expands the use of Framing Theory in organizations and expands previous research. This study also has application for managers wishing to reduce turnover. Limitations and ideas for future studies were stated.
