When disaster strikes your home or you find yourself lost in the wilderness without a fully stocked survival kit, you may believe all is lost. But this could not be any farther from the truth. A critical but too often overlooked element of any good survival plan is to take simple everyday items around your house and then apply those items into a variety of useful purposes related directly to you and your family's survival. Look around you. Your house, office, car, and even your trash cans are filled up with lots of things that you rarely think twice about. Several of these items can be utilized for a multitude of unique and incredible lifesaving applications beyond their marketed use. This guide introduces you to exactly 25 such household items and outlines ten specific and unique ways that each can save your life. For example, did you know that you can make a miniature barbecue grill out of an Altoids tin? Or that you can use an ordinary paperclip as a compass to tell your sense of direction? Or that you can convert a drinking straw into a torch?

zombie apocalypse, your best bet for survival is being ready. Many people wonder about what they would do in a disaster situation, but don't take the time to properly prepare for one. This book is designed to make you start thinking about what items you should have in case of an emergency as well as what everyday items can be used to help you survive in a disaster. Disasters vary greatly by region, ranging from month-long blizzards in the far north to tsunamis and hurricanes around the equator. You may even be preparing for nuclear fallout, which requires far more preparation than a big storm. The items you will need to survive vary greatly depending on what you're preparing for, but the priorities mostly remain the same: food, water, shelter, fire. The hacks included in this book range from the simple, broad survival tips that everyone can use - such as a flat tire in the middle of nowhere - to the more specific long-term tips for those facing more extended disasters. The hacks have been divided up into three categories. Here is a preview of what you'll learn:
