"As well established as the right to work is in the industrialized world, in many places it is neither as well defined nor protected even though signatories to various international treaties profess their adherence to the lofty principles contained in the array of documents addressing what is recognized as a fundamental human right. The right to work is an important human right - without the ability to support themselves, workers have a difficult time affording themselves, and their families, the opportunity to enjoy their other rights." "International documents acknowledge the fundamental right of individuals to work, but do not explicitly address the status of teachers. This book covers twelve different nations in an analysis of rights allowed and denied to teachers throughout the world." --Book Jacket.

Schools and School districts must follow the law as ascribed by the United States Constitution and laws that prohibit discrimination. For the timeframe referenced for this dissertation, other legislative acts will examine laws relative to Employment Discrimination. Specifically, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Section 1981 and 1983: U.S.C. 42 will help to reemphasize the importance of fair labor practices throughout this nation's school districts. At the conclusion for this study, the results will bring awareness by assisting school boards, school districts and schools to use fair hiring practices by following the letter of the law and preventing unnecessary litigation and undue media attention when the ultimate goal is providing quality education to each student and creating lifelong learners and responsible citizens.
