

Give Us A Kiss

From a noted science journalist comes a wonderfully witty and fascinating exploration of how and why we kiss. When did humans begin to kiss? Why is kissing integral to some cultures and alien to others? Do good kissers make the best lovers? And is that expensive lip-plumping gloss worth it? Sheril Kirshenbaum, a biologist and science journalist, tackles these questions and more in THE SCIENCE OF KISSING. It's everything you always wanted to know about kissing but either haven't asked, couldn't find out, or didn't realize you should understand. The book is informed by the latest studies and theories, but Kirshenbaum's engaging voice gives the information a light touch. Topics range from the kind of kissing men like to do (as distinct from women) to what animals can teach us about the kiss to whether or not the true art of kissing was lost sometime in the Dark Ages. Drawing upon classical history, evolutionary biology, psychology, popular culture, and more, Kirshenbaum's winning book will appeal to romantics and armchair scientists alike.

We all look for love. We look for the person who will give us attention and kindness, who will look at us with a friendly smile anytime, day or night, a person who unexpectedly gives us a kiss for no reason or lovingly strokes our head despite what we've done. We want a person who will unconditionally accept us and whisper in our ear, "I love you." We accept the challenge of finding this person even when he is our parent or child. Into our search, we invest time, energy, thought, and dreamless nights. When we cannot find such a person, we suffer. When we have such a person credit for the kiss, but Macy can't shake the feeling that he's lying. Especially since a photograph of Macy and former star football player Joel Hargrove resurfaced online moments before the blackout, a not-so-random reminder of how hard she fell for Joel last year. And how doing so ultimately sent her lifelong friendships with Meredith Kopala and Ben Collins up in literal smoke. Soon last year's wounds begin to reopen as Macy realizes the events that unfolded during junior year are somehow tied to her mystery kisser. But the closer Macy gets to figuring it all out, the more she starts to worry that the boy who kissed her in the dark and the boy who is stealing her heart might be two very different people. pushing out the words trapped inside her. "I'm sure you know by now I have the world's hugest crush on you, Kyle. I'm as madly in love with you as a fifteen-year-old can be, and I know you're too old and you don't feel the same way for me, but I was hoping maybe you could give me a kiss goodbye." Her heart lodged in her throat, and she swallowed thickly to clear the lump as she stared up at the eighteen-year-old boy standing near her. Would he reject her, or let her down easy? She hoped he would give her a simple kiss. Truly, it was little to request, though it felt like she was asking for the world. His Mimicking what she'd seen in movies, she put her hands on his shoulders and threaded her fingers through his hair. As she stroked his scalp gently with her nails, she saw his eyelids blink a couple of times, and he moaned softly. Clearly he enjoyed this type of touch.
