In this fascinating book, New Yorker business columnist James Surowiecki explores a deceptively simple idea: Large groups of people are smarter than an elite few, no matter how brilliant—better at solving problems, fostering innovation, coming up with decisions, even predicting the future. With boundless erudition and in delightfully clear prose, Surowiecki ranges across a wide and diverse as popular culture, psychology, ant biology, behavioral economics, artificial intelligence, military history, and p show how this simple idea offers important lessons for how we live our lives, select our leaders, run our companies about our world.
