asked the Board of Worship and the Board of Deacons to appoint a task force to review the 1933 Presbyterian Hymnal used since 1952 by the church, and to consider what additional hymn resources may be needed to enhance the worship of God in this place. The task force carefully studied the 1933 hymnal and dozens of other hymnals and hymnal supplements produced in the past sixty years by both denominational and non-denominational publishers. The task force concluded that no single publication quite embodied the theological, devotional, and liturgical life of our particular community. Often, the hymnals contained language that was either doctrinally specific for a particular denomination, or included hymns in languages for particular ethnic communities, or did not express adequately the theological and cultural life of our congregation. Moreover, the wedding of music and text sometimes fell short of what we wanted for congregational worship. After much serious discussion of all these issues, the task force concluded we needed a hymnal reflecting this community's specific historical, theological, and liturgical traditions. This meant not only retaining the familiar hymns of the 1933 hymnal but also reclaiming some hymns not in that hymnal which Baptists and other Christians have considered important faith expressions for generations. As the writing of hymns is a dynamic art that continues to this day, the task force also considered hundreds of hymns written before and since 1933 for inclusion in the present hymnal. In the end, what guided the creation of this hymnal was a prayerful commitment to provide a rich variety of faith expressions for this Christian community to sing to the glory of God. The Baptist Hymnal

Hymns of Grace

The Baptist Hymnal for Use in the Church and Home of 1883 is a significant hymnal for Baptists in the United States, as it was the first major hymnal after the split of the Triennial Convention in 1845 to bring together Baptists from all over the country in its production. It was an ecumenically broad hymnal,

Baptists, as well as providing both a familiar and a new tune for most of its hymns. The editor-in-chief, William Howard Doane, was well-known as a Sunday school and gospel music composer. His expertise brought this music into the hymnal, making it one of the first major denominational hymnals to include it. The assistant musical editor, Elias Henry Johnson, was a lover of the high church music of the Oxford Movement, and his influence meant that the hymnal also included much of this body of music. The Baptist Hymnal (1883) was well-received in the denominational presses, with almost universally positive reviews. It sold well, with claims of sales of around a million copies repeated over several years. It had an immense influence on Baptist hymnals published after it by the Northern and Southern Baptist conventions, the Canadian Baptists, and the African American Baptist conventions. It was still in use by some churches in a 1938 report on music in the Southern Baptist churches, and continues to be used, especially in Primitive Baptist churches, today. This hymnal is also important for its view into Baptist worship practices of the time. The hymns appearing in the hymnal were chosen by five or more of the participating editors. This method of choosing hymns means that it gives a good record of the hymns that Baptists were singing in the latter nineteenth century. This in-depth study of the hymnal provides insight into nineteenth century Baptist worship. - Publisher.
