This volume covers one of the most critical - and one of the most interesting - periods in the history of the Church. It is, from the beginning, a period of revolt - the revolts of thinkers and 'mystics', of princes and kings, of bishops and monks, of capitalist bourgeois and proletarian workers. It is the story of the Templars, of the 'Avignon captivity' and the Great Schism of the West, of the councils of Pisa and Contance and Basel, of the Renaissance and the rise of the Ottoman Turks. It is the story, too, of philosophers (Duns Scotus and Ockham), theologians (Gerson, Nicolas of Cusa, and Cajetan) and humanists (More, Machiavelli, and Erasmus). Popes of the period include Boniface VIII, 'Benedict XIII', Nicholas V, and Pius II, as well as the notorious Borgia, della Rovere, and Medici pontiffs. And, in these 250 years which culminated in the Reformation, come Wicklif, John Hus, and Martin Luther - and Catherine of Sienna, Vincent Ferrer, and Antonius of Florence.

The transborder modernization of Mexico and the American Southwest during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries transformed the lives of ethnic Mexicans across the political divide. While industrialization, urbanization, technology, privatization, and wealth concentration benefitted some, many more experienced dislocation, exploitative work relations, and discrimination based on race, gender, and class. The Mexican Revolution brought these issues to the fore within Mexican society, igniting a diaspora to el norte. Within the United States, similar economic and social power dynamics plagued Tejanos and awaited the war refugees. Political activism spearheaded by individuals and organizations such as the Idars, Leonor Villegas' de Magnón's White Cross, the Magonista movement, the Munguias, Emma Tenayuca, and LULAC emerged in the borderlands to address the needs of ethnic Mexicans whose lives were shaped by racism, patriarchy, and poverty. As Gabriela Gonzalez shows in this book, economic modernization relied on social hierarchies that were used to justify economic inequities. Redeeming la raza was about saving ethnic Mexicans in Texas from a social hierarchy premised on false notions of white supremacy and Mexican inferiority. Activists used privileges of class, education, networks, and organizational skills to confront the many injustices that racism bred, but they used different strategies. Thus, the anarcho-syndicalist approach of Magónistas stands in contrast to the social and cultural redemption politics of the Idars who used the press to challenge a Jaime Crow world. Also, the family promoted the intellectual, material, and cultural uplift of la raza, working to combat negative stereotypes of ethnic Mexicans. Similar contrasts can be drawn between the labor activism of Emma Tenayuca and the Munguias, whose struggle for rights employed a politics of respectability that encouraged ethnic pride and unity. Finally, maternal feminist approaches and the politics of citizenship serve as reminders that gendered and nationalist rhetoric and practices foment hierarchies within civil and human rights organizations. Redeeming La Raza examines efforts of activists to create a dignified place for ethnic Mexicans in American society by challenging white supremacy and the segregated world it spawned.

Over the last forty years, Sir John Baker has written on most aspects of English legal history, and this collection of his writings includes many papers that have been widely cited. Providing points of reference and foundations for further research, the papers cover the legal profession, the inns of court and chancery, legal education, legal institutions, legal literature, legal antiquities, public law and individual liberty, criminal justice, private law (including contract, tort and restitution) and legal history in general. An introduction traces the development of some of the research represented by the papers, and cross-references and new endnotes have been added. A full bibliography of the author's works is also included.

This book constitutes the thoroughly refereed post-workshop proceedings of the 9th International Workshop of the Initiative for the Evaluation of XML Retrieval, INEX 2009, held in Vught, The Netherlands, in December 2009. The aim of the INEX 2010 workshop was to bring together researchers in the field of XML IR who participated in the INEX 2010 campaign.

During the past year, participating organizations contributed to the building of large-scale XML test collections by creating topics, performing retrieval runs and providing relevance assessments. The workshop concluded the results of this large-scale effort, summarized and addressed issues encountered, and devised a work plan for the future evaluation of XML retrieval systems. The 37 full papers presented were carefully reviewed and selected from 42 submissions; they are organized into sections corresponding to the nine tracks of the workshop, investigating various aspects of XML retrieval, from book search to entity.

The idea of koinonia has gained prominence in recent ecumenical discussions. Lorelei Fuchs proposes the theological concept of koinonia, loosely translated as communion, as the key to moving the fractured churches toward a future unity. Fuchs challenges churches to move beyond mere dialogue to apply their ecumenical insights at the local level. She begins by relating the exegetical meaning of koinonia to its ecumenical meaning, tracing the place of koinonia both within the churches and between the churches. She then examines the concept in the extensive and

This study of Old Spanish and present-day Mexico and New Mexico data develops a grammaticization account of variation in progressive constructions. Diachronic changes in cooccurrence patterns show that grammaticization involves reductive change driven by frequency increases. Formal reduction results in the emergence of auxilliary-plus-gerund sequences as fused units. Semantically, the constructions originate as spatial expressions; their grammaticization involves gradual loss of locative features of meaning. Semantic generalization among parallel evolutionary paths results in the competition among different constructions in the domain of progressive aspect. Patterns of synchronic variation follow from both the retention of meaning differences and the routinization of frequent collocations, as well as sociolinguistic factors. Register considerations turn out to be crucial in evaluating the effects of language contact. Purported changes in Spanish — English bilingual varieties are largely a feature of oral, informal language rather than a manifestation of convergence.

This volume covers the language situation in Ecuador, Mexico and Paraguay, explaining the linguistic diversity, the historical and political contexts and the current language situation, including language-in-education planning, the role of the media, the role of religion, and the roles of indigenous and non-indigenous languages. The authors are indigenous and/or have been participants in the language-planning context. This volume contains monographs on Ecuador, Mexico and Paraguay, countries which are not well represented in the recent international language policy and planning literature, and draws together the existing published research in this field. The purpose of the area volumes in this series is to present up-to-date information on polities, particularly those that are not well known to researchers in the field, thereby providing descriptions of language planning and policy in countries around the world.

The need to integrate both content and language instruction in the contexts of English for Academic Purposes (EAP) is widely advocated for. Even though such courses, referred to as Content Based Instruction (CBI), place heavy demands on instructors, they seem to benefit learners in a number of ways. In addition, they have the underlying assumption that the needs of the target audience are considered in all aspects of course development. This would do away with what Hutchinson and Waters (1987, 2009) term ad hoc course development designs. Furthermore, it is generally agreed that reading is a fundamental means of acquiring new information and that there is a strong correlation between reading and academic performance (Grabe and Stoller, 2013). This, as well as the researcher ' s expertise and interest in academic reading, prompted the development of an English for Specific Academic Purposes (ESAP) reading course, based on principles of CBI instruction, to respond to criticisms against ad hoc course development at the Language Centre (LC) at the University of Namibia (UNAM) in a practical way and not just simply implement theoretical ideologies (Arendale, 2002) or follow the default solution to use remedies that had worked elsewhere, without considering local contexts

(Weideman, 2013). As the LC provides Academic Literacy (AL) support to the entire UNAM student population, a sample of first-year students from the School of Medicine became the target audience for the development of an adjunct reading course. A thorough needs analysis identified the target course as Biochemistry 1 and the target topic as Stereochemistry. One of the core objectives of this study was to develop a mixed-methods, action research methodological model for the design of academic reading courses for specific subject fields. In doing so, the principles of CBI adjunct course development as suggested by Brinton et al. (1989), as well as suggestions for the development of adjunct courses (Andrade & Makaafi, 2001; Arendale, 2002; Brinton et al., 1989; Evans Commander & Smith, 1995) were considered. In addition, three main prototypes, Hutchinson and Waters (1987; 2009) 's framework for establishing learning needs, Grabe and Stoller 's (2011) generic reading framework for conducting action research with the focus on academic reading and Onwuegbuzie and Dickinson 's (2007) 10 step PMARS Process for mixed methods action research were surveyed. By combining relevant elements from these models, but also by addressing certain perceived lacks in the above mentioned prototypes, a generic 17-step model to design academic reading courses for specific fields using mixed methods action research was designed. The model is named Mixed Methods Academic Action Reading Research (MMAARR). Subsequently, a very specific EAP adjunct reading course, comprising of an intensive as well as an extensive component to assist the target audience to cope with the academic reading demands of the target topic, Stereochemistry, was developed, implemented and evaluated. The insights offered here can also be applied to other aspects of academic literacy. Ten research questions (and sub questions) and one hypothesis were developed to conduct the current research reported on in six phases, namely exploration, needs analysis, setting criteria for developing the new reading course, developing the reading programme, evaluating the reading programme and reflection. By employing pragmatism as a worldview, a more complete understanding of the research problem was aimed for. Furthermore, the study has contributed to the on-going discussion about the challenges encountered by EAP practitioners that are not content experts. Very little research has been carried out in this regard (Alexander, 2008). To this effect, this study emphasises the need for EAP instructor training, in particular LC instructor in-service training, in order to conduct action research, to design, implement and evaluate EAP courses, in particular academic reading courses. It also underscores the reality that EAP lecturers cannot conduct ESAP courses in isolation and require good collaboration with content lecturers. In addition, no previous study on establishing the reading needs for stereochemistry anywhere in the world could be traced, another reason for the significance of this study. In this process, this study has addressed the mistaken view that science instruction is monolithic. This research only presents an initial step in finding solutions to LC course development at UNAM, and has been subjected to various limitations. However, the study concludes with several suggestions for further studies, especially in context of the current study.

This two-volume compilation contains the texts of documents in Latin, Middle French and Middle English (with translations and abstracts) concerning the later phases of the Hundred Years' War, focusing on the period 1423-1450. Published between 1861 and 1864, it was edited by Joseph Stevenson (1807-95), a Northumbrian archivist and clergyman who had been instrumental in persuading the British government to sponsor the Rolls Series project. Volume 2, Part 2 focuses on material from English libraries including Lambeth Palace and the College of Heralds. It covers court and dynastic matters, and contains lists of combatants and casualties, articles of surrender, a papal bull with its delivery receipt, an invoice for copying two books, details about the procurement of bows and arrows, ships and horses, and an account for the expense of keeping a prisoner in custody. This volume also includes a chronological
